The Lattès example with four arcs blown up.

The Lattès subdivision rule has two tile types, A and B. Each tile type is a square, and each is subdivided into four subsquares. This example is obtained from the Lattès subdivision rule by "blowing up" the two vertical arcs in the subdivision of tile type A and the two horizontal arcs in the subdivision of tile type B. The first four subdivisions of tile type A are shown.